

New and Original Fashion Designs For Smart Women

There is a vast difference between knowing the mode and interpreting it. To know, for instance, that waistlines are low is one thing, but to be able to place it just low enough to gain a modish effect, and also to be becoming, is another. To know that the trend of skirts is longer, is quite different than to know how to lengthen your own becomingly. Especially to women not favored with perfect proportions is this difference more poignant.

I saw a very pretty young woman the other day who was not more than five feet tall, slender and well proportioned, who had made a perfect caricature of herself in her interpretation of the mode. Her skirt was so long as to almost touch the floor on each side, and reached to within five inches of it the rest of the way around. The waistline was dropped and the sleeves wide—a stylish enough frock for a taller person. But this young woman was overpowered in it, and to make matters worse, the fabric of the frock was heavy crepe-back satin. Had it been flimsy chiffon the effect would not have been half so bad. The daintiness of it would have been in harmony with her delicate type of face and feet.

I could mention numerous other instances that are seen daily which make the warning seem not inconsequential, that while to know the mode is necessary to good dressing, the proper interpretation is more so.

I have designed here a trig street frock to be made of light weight serge or other woolen fabric. Its long sleeves and reasonably high cut neck line are practical, while the diagonal closing line and side opening are distinctive features which are graciously emphasized by the braid motif. This occurs at the front, high enough above the waistline to have the belt cross it below the centre. Bands of the same braid elaborate the sleeves which are gathered into narrow bands at the wrists. Down the back of the frock a double row of the braid from neck to hem is the only relief from other plainness.

Dear Miss Lodewick: Will you design a pretty school dress for me, to be made of dark blue wool jersey? I am eighteen years old, blonde, weigh 119 pounds, 5 feet 4 inches tall and slender. D. V.

Ans. Dull blue flannel or ribbon bindings would be pretty on this model.

To Miss M.—A very chic frock of your brown satin crepe could be made according to design for D. V. Bindings of self color grosgrain ribbon. Green belt buckles.

Dear Miss Lodewick: Are capes going to be fashionable this winter? Would one of brown velvet be smart? I have color, inserted in points or scallops or lengthwise bands.

Dear Miss Lodewick: I have four yards of cinnamon brown tricot which I would like to have made up in a style suitable for travelling and business. Am thirty-five years old, 5 feet 2 inches tall, size 38. Would appreciate a design by you, as I have followed many you have offered in others.

Ans. Brown or black velvet could be used for shawl collar and under-cuffs, or heavy black charmeuse. Thin folds of the tricot for trimming, and either a brown bone or black metal buckle. To Miss Van N.—Design for Mrs. M. D. T. would be using silk for your black velvet, using silk broad trimming and either dull blue or white corded silk collar and cuffs.

Dear Miss Lodewick: Do you think inclosed color (satin) becoming to me? I have chestnut hair, gray-blue eyes, fair skin and considerable color. How would you suggest using two and one-third yards of it? Could I combine it with something else for a dinner and theatre gown? It must not be fussy, as I am a commuter. Am thirty years of age, 5 feet 3 inches tall, weigh 121 pounds.

Mrs. C. C. Ans. Your color is not exceptionally becoming. A pale shade could be put with it. Of panne velvet or duvetyn for the bodice it may be sprinkled with rose and silver beads. You might be able to buy some beaded hanging in shades of pink which could be fastened together with silver cord for the bodice. Silver and rose velvet ribbon entwined with the satin for a girle.

THE TROUBLE. "What's the trouble?" "The car won't run." "What's the matter?" "Pa's been fixing it again."

Secretary Davis Learned Labor Helping His Mother Wash Dishes

Three Times a Day He Did It for Family of Eight, so He's Qualified to Talk About "Better Homes."

Dishwashing is the meanest job in the world. Most people will admit it. Even the Secretary of Labor will admit it.

The manager of a big hotel says that when he can get men to do the "heart diving" for the hotel without paying them exorbitant wages he knows that the unemployment crisis is very serious.

Yet, United States Secretary of Labor, James J. Davis, in a talk broadcasted over the wireless in the interest of the "Better Homes in America" campaign, is quoted as an efficient dishwasher and therefore as an enthusiastic booster for better homes.

Mr. Davis knows what he's talking about when he speaks of dishwashing. As a little boy he washed dishes three times a day for a family of eight. His mother was busy as a bee all day long, rocking the cradle, cooking and cleaning and mending. When his brothers went out to work, James stepped into the kitchen as first helper. Says Mr. Davis:

"Anybody who thinks that stacking a pile of soiled dishes, sousing them in suds, scalding and rubbing them dry and putting them away three times a day is nothing to talk about, is all wrong. Every housewife in the country should have a double drain board for her sink to cut the endless task in two."

School days at Sharon, Pa., where the Davis family took up its residence, drew by Jim Davis went to work with his father in the mill as an iron puddler. He learned his trade and tramped the country for a job. He got it at Birmingham. Hard work, kneading pig iron in a white-hot furnace, stoking blazing fires and then going to dine at the "Buck of

CONNECTICUT KLAN ATTEND A FUNERAL

Members in Full Regalia at Grave of Manufacturer.

SOUTH NORWALK, Conn., Sept. 28.—The first funeral in Connecticut attended by the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan in full regalia was that of Archer D. Jennings, son of Charles E. Jennings, at Bradley Park, Meriden, the body being brought here for burial. A large floral "Bery cross" from "Meriden Klan No. 3" was placed upon the grave. Shortly before the services in the Jennings home four Klansmen in robes and masks appeared with the floral offering. They placed the flowers, offered prayer and left. Jennings shot himself Sunday night. He was a manufacturer of Yaleville, Conn.
